See My Smile, a song of Christian joy

These variations of the See My Smile song can be used with students who are using the Anybody Can Play Piano app and others who are in another type of lesson. These variations are free and can be used by anyone - no obligations.

The Level One of NOTES in the ACPP app introduces 3 notes for the first set of Silly Songs: Middle C, the D next to the Middle C and the B in the Bass Clef next to the Middle C. By this time I have talked about line and space notes, the grand staff, up and down, etc. So, the first two notes in the first, simple See My Smile Song are the Middle C and D. Then discusion can follow about what the next note is telling us to play on the piano. Since there are no skips, this is quite understandable and the students get some real confidence in their ability to figure out notation.

Also, only the first Middle C in the song has a fingering number (that is color coded for very young or very beginner students). If we put our right hand finger number one on Middle C, all our other fingers will line up on the keys that need to be played in the song. That is why there doesn't need to be any more finger numbers.

I have always taught in a way that parallels language. In language we use what we already know. We listen, we learn to talk, we learn to read...etc. I always told my young students that when they learned to say "mama" or "dada" they were not told to quit saying those words. Their mamas and dadas were thrilled that they could say those words. What happened was that they learned to say those words much better and were finally able to say Mother and Father or Mom and Dad or..... They also learned to say lots of other words and put them together to say things.

When a young student learns to play a song in a easy format, that student tends to enjoy learning that song in a format that is "more fancy". When many students can play the song in different formats, they can even play together. I had students, three to a piano, play on four pianos simultaneously in a Mall once. They all played the same songs, but in different levels. They had a really good time and the audience was mesmerized by 12 students playing simultaneously.

I also like students to sing and play as soon as they are able...another good skill! In fact this is a really good song to use with body movements. Let's see those smiles!

In addition to learning to play the piano I do like to "plant" the wonderful seed of Truth. I hope the words to this song bring joy to your students and those around them. I also hope they remember those words for their whole lifetime.
